

Update on Luquetta Class Action Lawsuit
Related to UC Professional Degree Fees
April 7, 2010

On March 10, 2010, the Superior Court of San Francisco ruled in favor of plaintiffs in the case Luquetta et al. v. the Regents of the University of California, a class-action lawsuit filed against the Regents challenging certain fee increases.

Class members generally include current and former UC students subject to the Fee for Selected Professional School Students (also known as the “professional degree fee”) who accepted the University’s offer of admission before August 25, 2003, who first enrolled in their UC professional degree program in the Summer 2003 term or thereafter, and whose professional degree fee was raised after their initial enrollment in that program.

This ruling is subject to appeal. No payments or refunds to any student, nor any estimate of the amount of fees, if any, that may be returned to individual class members, can be made until the court’s decision is finalized and any appeals are completed. That process may take up to a year or more to complete.

In the event that this litigation results in the disbursement of funds to class members, it will be important for UC to have accurate contact information for class members. Class members should keep campuses informed of their current contact information after they leave the University. Note that any disbursements will be distributed by a court-appointed claims administrator, not by the University.

Questions regarding the litigation should be directed to class counsel: Jonathan Weissglass and Danielle Leonard, Altshuler, Berzon, Nussbaum, Rubin & Demain, 177 Post Street, Suite 300, San Francisco, California, 94108 and Andrew D.
